Roxbury, Jan. 7, 1872.

My dear Johnson:

Yours of yesterday is received, enclosing the receipt for my subscription for the Christian Union. I was not aware, when I subscribed, that the gift of a chromo would be thrown in. It so happens that I have already framed, and hanging up in my chamber, those beautiful ones, "Fast Asleep" and "Wide Awake"; for as soon as I laid my eyes upon them, I purchased them, as a child-loving grandfather should. If they have been already mailed to me, I will present them to William's little Agnes. If not, then, instead, (as I see it is left optional,) "Little Runaway and her Pets" may be substituted. I enclose thirty-five cents to pay for the mailing and mounting.

I am really amazed at the circulation of the Christian Union.

My missing letter to you I put into the P. O. Box with my own hands. It was directed to you, Tribune Office. Probably you will find it there. Should you get it, though a portion of it will be painful to you, as relating to the late H. G., I am sure you will allow nothing in it to militate against the warmth of our old attachment. I certainly took no offence in being so severely censured in the letter to which mine was in reply. If mine is lost, perhaps it will be for the best.

Yours, as always,

Wm. Lloyd Garrison.
